Geo. Tamplin, Returning Officer.

I did not send in any account to either of the candidates at the last election.

My experience of many former elections, since the year 1849, when I was first appointed returning officer, enabled me to apprise the candidates respectively what sum would be required. The aggregate sum was 800 l.

Each candidate handed me a cheque for 250 l., and signed a letter undertaking to pay his proportion of the excess, if any.

No further demand has been made upon the candidates, or either of them.

It may be mentioned that in Marylebone, in addition to the hustings, eleven polling booths have to be erected.

That Samuel Morley, esquire, was, by his agents, guilty of bribery at the last Election.

That Charles Paget, esquire, was, by his agents, guilty of bribery at the last Election.

That it was proved to the Committee that Joseph Richard Whitechurch, and William Calah, junior, were bribed by William Marriott, with the knowledge of Sir Robert Jukes Clifton's agent, by the corrupt payment of excessive travelling expenses, to vote for Sir Robert Jukes Clifton.

That the said bribery was practised without the knowledge and consent of the said Sir Robert Jukes Clifton.

That at the last Election for the said town, an excessive number of persons were employed on behalf of Messrs. Paget and Morley as messengers, canvassers, and protectors from violence.

That in three wards alone, out of seven, nearly 200 voters were so employed by Messrs. Paget and Morley, who received from their agents sums varying in amount from 15 s. to 4*l.* 10 s.

That amongst the voters so paid were, John Flint, George Fish, John Champion, John Foster, Charles Taylor, James Wright, Jesse Chambers, Thomas Selby, Edward Claypole, William Evans, George Hudson, Thomas Hooton, Edward Wheatley, Henry Mayfield, Thomas Chetwin, John Hillary.

That Henry Merrin was bribed by William Milner, junior, by the promise of 4*l.* for his own vote, and the vote of his father, Frederick Merrin, to vote for Messrs. Paget and Morley, which sum he afterwards received.

That violent and tumultuous proceedings took place at the last Election for the Town of Nottingham, and on the day of polling especially bands of men armed with sticks, and others on behalf of Sir Robert Jukes Clifton, by committing serious outrages on the property and persons of the inhabitants, created an alarm which was not without its influence on the result of the Election.

That the state of excitement and alarm which prevailed immediately before and at the Election, afforded an apparently justifiable pretext for the hiring and payment payment by the agents of Messrs. Paget and Morley of an excessive number of voters, under the colourable pretence of employing them in carrying on the machinery of the Election, and the protection of the supporters of Messrs. Paget and Morley, which in the opinion of the Committee, led to a practice so extensive in its application and demoralizing in its effects, as well as unjustifiable and illegal.

That, in the opinion of the Committee, corrupt practices have not extensively prevailed at the last Election for the Town of Nottingham.

16 APRIL.—REIGATE ELECTION.

House informed, that the Committee had determined :—

That Granville William Gresham Leveson Gower, esquire, is not duly elected a Burgess to serve in this present Parliament for the Borough of Reigate.

That the last Election for the said Borough is a void Election.

House further informed that the Committee had agreed to the following Resolutions:—

1. That Granville William Gresham Leveson Gower, esquire, was, by his agents, guilty of bribery and treating at the last Election.

2. That it has been proved to the Committee.

That George Charles Beale received a bribe from C. J. Smith, the authorised agent of the said G. W. G. Leveson Gower, with a promise of further payment, on account of having voted for the said G. W. G. Leveson Gower.

That Josiah Ede was bribed by a promise of 5 l. made to him by Alexander Rose to vote for the said G. W. G. Leveson Gower, and was subsequently paid 2 l. by Frederick Joyce on account of having so voted.

That John Farrington was bribed by a promise of 5 l. made to him by Frederick Joyce to vote for the said G. W. G. Leveson Gower, and was subsequently paid 3 l. by the said Frederick Joyce for having so voted.

That James Peters was bribed by a promise of 4 l. made to him by Job Apted to vote for the said G. W. G. Leveson Gower, and was subsequently paid 2 l. by the said Job Apted for having so voted.

That Alfred Latham was bribed by a promise of money made to him by Job Apted to vote for the said G. W. G. Leveson Gower, and was subsequently paid 3 l. by C. J. Smith for having so voted.

3. That William Johnson and other witnesses proved that a system of treating prevailed at the last Election.

4. That the said bribery and treating were practised without the knowledge and consent of the said G. W. G. Leveson Gower.

5. That corrupt practices have extensively prevailed at the last Election for the said Borough.

24 APRIL.—RYE ELECTION.

House informed, that the Committee had determined :—

That Lauchlan Bellingham Mackinnon, esquire, is duly elected a Baron to serve in this present Parliament for the Town and Port of Rye.

House further informed that the Committee had agreed to the following Resolutions:—

That Thomas Bourne was bribed by the payment of 5 l. and 1 l. from Robert Hord for his vote.

That two letters, containing 5 l. each, were sent about the time of the Election to Samuel Lennard for the purpose of influencing his vote.

That it was not proved that such bribery was committed with the knowledge of the sitting Member or his agents.

That the attempt to prove that the Rev. William Brocklebank was bribed by a promise of an appointment for his Son by the sitting Member, was entirely unsupported by evidence, and is frivolous and vexatious.

That the attempt to prove that George Jenner was bribed by a promise of an appointment for his Nephew by the sitting Member, was entirely unsupported by evidence, and is frivolous and vexatious.

That there is not reason to believe that corrupt practices have extensively prevailed at the last Election for the Town and Port of Rye.

22 MARCH.—TOTNES ELECTION.

That John Pender, esquire, is not duly elected a Burgess to serve in this present Parliament for the Borough of Totnes.

That the last Election for the said Borough, so far as regards the return of John Pender, esquire, is a void Election.

House further informed, that the Committee had agreed to the following Resolutions :—

1. That John Pender, esquire, was guilty of bribery at the last Election.
2. That it was proved to the Committee that an offer of a place or employment was made by the said John Pender, esquire, to Robert Harris.
3. That it has been distinctly stated by some witnesses, and the general tenor of the evidence given, leads the Committee to believe, that a system of gross corruption prevailed at the last Election for the Borough of Totnes, and also on former similar occasions.
4. That there is reason to believe that corrupt practices have extensively prevailed in the said Borough.

30 APRIL.—WAKEFIELD ELECTION.

That Charles Batty was offered 20 l. to vote for the said W. H. Leatham, esquire, by George Kenworthy.

That Henry Barrett has absconded.

That it was not proved that any or either of the above acts were committed with the knowledge or consent of the said W. H. Leatham, esquire, or with the knowledge or consent of any of his Agents.

DEVONPORT ELECTION.

RETURN to an Order of the Honourable The House of Commons,
dated 8 March 1866 :—for,

COPY “of REPORT relative to serving SPEAKER’S WARRANTS respecting the DEVONPORT ELECTION PETITION ON VOTERS in DEVONPORT YARD.”

Admiralty, }
8 March 1866. }

JOHN HENRY BRIGGS,
Chief Clerk.

The Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Yard to the Secretary of the Admiralty.

(No. 54.)

Sir,

Devonport Yard, 7 March 1866.

PURSUANT to the directions of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, contained in your letter of 6th instant, E., to send up a connected report containing a continuous and accurate narrative of all that occurred from the arrival of the first telegram giving the day and hour (when known), &c., in reference to the “serving of Speaker’s Warrants on workmen in this yard,” I have the honour to report for the information of their Lordships that the first telegram I received was on the 20th February from the Admiralty, London, at 4.24 p. m., which I issued to the officers for their information on the same afternoon, viz. :—

“Every facility is to be given for serving Speaker’s Warrants on workmen in the yard, in the case of a Petition against sitting Members at Devonport.”

On the following morning I received their Lordships’ order of 20th February, which was issued to the officers on the 21st February, viz. :—

“Admiral Superintendent—Devonport Yard.

“In confirmation of my telegram of this day, their Lordships desire that every facility may be afforded for serving Speaker’s Warrants on workmen in Devonport Yard in the case of the Petition against the sitting Members for Devonport.

“By command of their Lordships,
(signed) “W. G. Romaine.”

On the 21st February, I received an application from the agents.

“We have Speaker’s Warrants to serve on the following persons in the matter of the Devonport Election Petition, 34 No.

“We have to ask that you will facilitate our serving same in the dockyards, and will cause them to be at such place as you may appoint to-morrow morning at 10 a. m. for that purpose.”

On which I gave my order, viz. :—

“Devonport Yard, 21st February 1866.

“The officers are to direct the persons herein named to be at the Sale Room, near the Police office, at 10 to-morrow morning, as herein requested.

(signed) “T. M. C. Symonds.”

2 REPORT RELATIVE TO SERVING SPEAKER'S WARRANTS

Similar applications were made by the agents, viz.—on 22d February, for 21 persons, and on 26th February for five persons, which I treated in the same way, considering that the orders to afford “every facility,” called upon me to go beyond the usual custom of serving local warrants, &c.

The men assembled accordingly on the 22d, 23d, and 27th ultimo, and remained, first day, 1 hour 20 minutes; second day, 1 hour; and third day, 30 minutes.

The Sale Room is about 244 feet from the main gate.

On the 27th February I received a note from Lord Clarence Paget, dated House of Commons, 26th February 1866, viz. :—

“My dear Symonds,

“Will you look at enclosed notice of Sir John Pakington. I have no idea to what he adverts, but shall be glad if you will give me full information in order that I may reply to him.

“Very faithfully,
(signed) “C. Paget.”

To which I replied as follows :—

“(Private.)

“Devonport Yard, 27 February 1866.

“My dear Lord Clarence Paget,

“I send you copies of the orders under which I have acted, also of the application made to and approved by me in obedience to the two orders which contained the same words ‘on workmen in the yard.’ I therefore ordered that the people sought and applied for, should assemble at the hour requested in a quiet part of the yard, instead of their being sought separately at their work, where they saw the parties applying by Speaker’s Warrant,* and were perfectly uninterfered with by their own officers; you have everything I can think of.

“Yours faithfully,
(signed) “T. M. C. Symonds.”

“P.S.—Is not this much in favour of disfranchising dockyards?”

I heard nothing of examination until I received Lord Clarence Paget’s note of 26th February, nor have I since, as superintendent of this dockyard. The officers state that they left the workmen to themselves; that they have heard of no interference with them. The police also state they were left to themselves and undisturbed by them; that no naval officers were present, nor officers belonging to or connected with the dockyard.

I gave no authority whatever for anything else but serving the Speaker’s Warrants. On the 6th instant I issued the following order to the officers, viz. :—

“Did you, or any of you attend the serving the workmen with Speaker’s Warrants, 22d, 23d, and 27th ultimo?

“Do you know of any officers whatever who did attend, and do you believe from anything you have heard that any dockyard official did attend or interfere?

(signed) “T. M. C. Symonds,
“Admiral Superintendent.”

“Respective Officer.”

They reported:—

“6 March 1866.

“We beg to state, that neither we nor any of us attended the serving of the workmen of the dockyard or factory with Speaker’s Warrants on 22d, and 23d, and 27th ultimo.

“We

* Thus giving “every facility.”

"We do not know of any officer whatever who did attend, nor do we believe, from anything we have heard directly or indirectly, that any dockyard official did attend, or did interfere in any manner whatever beyond carrying out the superintendent's order to direct the men to assemble.

(signed) "H. C. Pullen, Assistant Master Attendant
(for Master Attendant on leave).
"A. Moore, Master Shipwright.
"T. W. Miller, Chief Engineer.
"A. Elliott, Storekeeper.
"H. Brady, Accountant.
"H. Innes, Cashier.
"R. Townshend, Superintending Civil Engineer."

I also ordered the police to report, and received the following, viz. :—

"6 March 1866.

"I HAVE the honour to report that on the 22d ultimo, when Messieurs Edmonds, Demett, and Butcher came to the dockyard to serve the Speaker's Warrants on dockyard workmen, I saw no naval or dockyard officer present, and have no knowledge of the men having been influenced or interfered with by any officer.

"The time the agents were in the yard was about one hour and 20 minutes; some of the men left the room in about 10 minutes after the agents came.

"On neither occasion did I hear any complaint made by either of the men of having been influenced or interfered with by any naval or dockyard officer.

(signed) "John Baxter,
"Superintendent of Police."

"6 March 1866.

"WE have the honour to report that on the occasion of the visit of the Parliamentary agents on 22d, 23d, and 27th ultimo, to serve the Speaker's Warrants on workmen employed in the dockyard, we saw no naval or dockyard officer present, and heard no complaint made by either of the workmen of their having been influenced or interfered with by any of the officers.

(signed) "Wm. Crook, Chief Inspector.
"W. Connell, Serjeant at Gate, 22d and 23d ultimo.
"Thos. J. Congan, Serjeant at Gate, 27th ultimo."

On 28th February I received a telegram from the Admiralty at 12.40 P.M., No. 4, viz. :—

"Immediate.

"The following is a copy of a question to be asked by Sir J. Pakington in the House of Commons to-morrow :—'To call the attention of the Government to certain statements as to the manner in which dockyard workmen who are voters for the borough of Devonport have been examined in the dockyard with reference to their intended evidence before the Election Committee for that borough, and to ask for explanation. Report what was done by law agents beyond serving the Speaker's Warrants as authorised by their Lordships.'"

This telegram was cancelled by one from Lord C. Paget, London, to Admiral Symonds, Devonport, dated 25th February, and received at 12.55 p.m., viz. :—

"Cancel telegram No. 4.

"Will you allow me to read your letter to me marked 'Private' in the House of Commons 'to-morrow?'"

To which I answered at 1.13 p.m., same day :—"I have no objection what ever."

On 28th Feb., at 1.30 p.m., I received telegram as follows from the Admiralty, London :—

"Write by post for how long time were the workmen absent from their work when assembled under subpœna by Speaker's Warrant on 22d, 23d, and 27th, and on any other occasion."

4 REPORT RELATIVE TO SERVING SPEAKER'S WARRANTS

In reply to which, the following reports were forwarded by me for the information of their Lordships, 28th Feb., viz. :—

“ Workmen away from their work by subpœna.”

“ Sir,

“ Devonport Yard, 23 Feb. 1866.

“ In obedience to Admiralty telegram of this day, we beg leave to report, as near as can be ascertained, the workmen were absent from their work under “subpœna by Speaker’s Warrant on an average about one hour each man.

(signed “ J. K. Martyn.
“ Master Attendant.
“ A. Moore,

“ 4 March 1866.

“ In the absence of the Master Attendant I beg to state that it was intended “in this report to convey that the men were away one hour from their work, “and not that each man was absent one hour.

(signed) “ A. Moore.”

“ Sir,

“ Keyham Factory, 28 Feb. 1866.

“ In obedience to your Minute of this day by telegram, I beg to state that the “workmen of this department, when assembled under subpœna by Speaker’s “Warrant on 22d and 23d instant, were absent from their duty from one hour to “one hour and a-half.

(signed) “ T. W. Miller,
“ Chief Engineer.”

On the 2d March, at 3.30 p.m., the following telegram from the Admiralty, London, reached me, viz. :—

“The agent for the Petitioner in the election for Devonport is not to be “allowed to do more than serve the Speaker’s Warrants, and on no account is he “to be allowed to make use of any of the dockyard buildings for the examination “of workmen.”

The officers were informed of this telegram on the same afternoon, and on the following morning I received their Lordships’ letter, 2d March, viz. :—

“ Admiral Superintendent—Devonport Yard.

“ Admiralty, 2 March 1866.

“ In confirmation of my further telegram of this day, their Lordships direct me “to inform you that the agent for the Petitioner in the Election for Devonport “is not to be allowed to do more within the dockyard than serve the Speaker’s “Warrants, and on no account is he to be allowed to make use of any of the “dockyard buildings for the examination of the workmen.

“ By command of their Lordships,

(signed) “ W. G. Romaine.”

This order was issued to the officers 3d March.

On the 3d March, Lord C. Paget sent me the following telegram, which arrived at 2.12 p.m. :—

“Immediate.

“Send copy by telegraph of my note of the 26th, enclosing Sir J. Pakington’s “ ‘notice.’ ”

Which I duly complied with at 2.34 p.m. same day.

I have the honour to report for their Lordships’ information, that I have received no application from their agent since 26th February.

I have, &c.

RETURN to an Order of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 27 July 1866;—for,

COPY “of CORRESPONDENCE between the Office of Public Works and Mr.
E. M. Barry, relative to the NEW ROOF of the HOUSE of COMMONS.”

Mr. E. M. Barry to Mr. Alfred Austin.

21, Abingdon-street, S.W.,
29 April 1865.

Sir,

IN accordance with the instructions of the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works, &c., I have communicated with Dr. Percy, and have carefully examined with him the roof over the House of Commons, to ascertain whether the wooden fittings placed in the roof are secure from risk of fire.

The roof of the House of Commons is wholly constructed of incombustible materials, and the question of danger can therefore only apply to the wooden fittings which have been placed in the roof since its completion by those entrusted with the ventilation and lighting of the House, without any architectural supervision. The fittings consist of handrails, bridges, partitions, steps, and air tubes; and, as the temperature of the roof is very high in consequence of the mode adopted for lighting the House, there is no doubt that the whole of the fittings are in a state highly favourable for ignition in the event of any accidental circumstance taking place. The same remark applies to the ribs of the ceiling of the House which are in close proximity to the gas lights.

I advise that the whole of the fittings be removed and replaced (as far as they are required for use by Dr. Percy) by others of incombustible materials; and I also recommend that the edges and exposed surfaces of the upper parts of the ribs of the ceiling should be protected by a metal covering.

I am, &c.

Alfred Austin, Esq.

(signed) Edward M. Barry.

Mr. Alfred Austin to Dr. Percy, F.R.S.

Sir,

Office of Works, &c., 3 May 1865.

I AM directed by the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works, &c., to send you herewith copy of a letter dated the 29th ultimo, received by him from Mr. E. M. Barry, respecting the risk of fire to the fittings over the roof of the House of Commons, and to inform you that he has requested Mr. Barry to put himself into communication with you as to the fittings that will be required in future, and to furnish him with an estimate of the cost of the works recommended by him.

I am, &c.

Dr. Percy, F.R.S.

Mr. Alfred Austin to Mr. E. M. Barry.

Sir,

Office of Works, &c., 3 May 1865.

THE First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works, &c., has had before him your letter of the 29th ultimo, respecting the risk of fire to the wooden fittings in the roof over the House of Commons, and recommending that the whole of the fittings should be removed and replaced (as far as they are required for use by Dr. Percy) by others of incombustible materials, and also that the edges and exposed surfaces of the upper parts of the ceiling of the House of Commons should be protected by a metal covering; and I am directed by him to request that you will put yourself into communication with Dr. Percy as to the fittings that will be required in future, and furnish the First Commissioner with an estimate of the cost of the works recommended by you.

I am, &c.

E. M. Barry, Esq.

(signed) Alfred Austin, Secretary.

Mr. E. M. Barry to Mr. Alfred Austin.

Sir,

21, Abingdon-street, 29 May 1865.

IN accordance with your letter of the 3d instant, I have to report that I have placed myself in communication with Dr. Percy, and obtained information from him as to the fittings that will be required for the future in the roof of the House of Commons for the effectual ventilation of the House without risk of fire.

The roof is at present encumbered by fittings placed there to carry out modes of ventilation long since abandoned, and their removal or modification will enable Dr. Percy to carry out several important improvements in the method of ventilation at present in use. The changes and improvements which I recommend, including an alteration of the gas burners under the galleries, which Dr. Percy states are now much complained of, are described in the specification which I enclose herewith for the information of the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works, &c., and I estimate the cost of carrying them into effect at 1,540*l.*, and consider that a period of five months will be necessary for their execution.

I am, &c.

Alfred Austin, Esq.

(signed) Edward M. Barry.

REPORT on Alterations and Improvements proposed to be made in the Ventilating Channels over the House of Commons.

The Ventilating Pipes for the Ceiling Burners.

These pipes are all collected into two main horizontal pipes which are fixed in the upper portion of the roof. As there is under them, and between them and the wooden ceiling, a floor of tile and cement arches, I recommend that they be left undisturbed, for I do not see that they could be rendered safer than they are at present. But their mouths, which now open into the ventilating chamber over the lobby, should I think be connected more directly with the ventilating shaft, so that its draught should be always acting with certainty on them, and that the noxious products which they discharge should be carried into the shaft without inconveniencing the attendants in the ventilating channels.

The Partitions for forming Ventilating Channels in the Roof.

At present these partitions are somewhat complex in their arrangement, because they were erected in order to provide chambers of ingress for fresh air to the ceiling, as well as for egress of vitiated air from it. Moreover they are of lath and plaster, and no doubt their woodwork is very dry and combustible. I recommend that they be entirely removed, and that a single central channel for discharge of vitiated air be formed in lieu of the complex channels now existing. In order to form this channel I should advise that casings of sheet iron be fixed to the sloping ties of the iron roof, rivetting those sheets together at the joints, and securing them together in their places by hook-bolts to the principals, providing such stiffening ribs as may be necessary to make them firm, and to retain their shape. The outer portions of the roof chamber are already floored with tile and cement, and the sheet-iron casing being made good good to this flooring, the whole of the necessary channels would be formed without any combustible materials.

Stairs, Gangways, and Valves in Roof.

At present these are of wood, and therefore liable to the same objections as the partitions. I should advise that they be entirely removed, that the gangways should be formed of light iron gratings, with handrails of iron tube, that the stairs for giving access to different levels be light iron ladders, and that the valves be of sheet iron stiffened by suitable ribs.

Passage from Roof of House to Ventilating Shaft.

At present the vitiated air has to rise from its channel in the roof into a chamber above the lobby, thence it descends to the base of ventilating shaft which is situated on the floor below. The vitiated air from the ventilating shaft of the refreshment rooms has to follow the same course, and the channels are thus very tortuous and unfavorable to direct ventilation.

I advise that the apartment over the lobby, now used as a gas fitter's shop, which is level with the base of the shaft, should be divided by partitions so as to form channels direct to the shaft. These partitions might be built of half brick in cement on the existing fire-proof arches over the lobby.

In order to effect the communication from the roof of the house to this chamber it would be necessary to remove the two walls which at present exist. These walls support nothing, as they terminate at the floor of the present ventilating channels, and might therefore be removed without prejudice to the stability of the building.

Woodwork of Ceiling.

A large extent of wood surface is presented in the ventilating chambers, and it might be a question whether something could be done to render it safe from fire. If the fire originated below the ceiling it is evident that no protecting material above it would be of any avail. It is, therefore, only against the risk of fire originating above, that is to say, in the ventilating channels, that any protection should be sought, and I should, therefore, recommend the covering of these surfaces with thin lead. This, without adding much weight, would, at all events, guard against ignition from the dropping of a lighted match or wick, and I do not see any other probable cause of accidental ignition. Against wilful incendiarism it is, of course, needless to provide, nor perhaps is it possible to do so unless a metal ceiling were substituted for the present wooden one.

The Gas Burners under the Side Galleries.

At present the products of combustion from these burners are collected in an iron pipe, laid horizontally under one of the seats, and communicating with an ascending flue in the wall, whence they are conducted by an iron pipe into the main pipes in the roof, which serve to ventilate the ceiling burners. The horizontal pipe under the gallery seat becomes so hot that it renders the seat above it uncomfortably warm. It is of course subject to the corrosive effects of the carbonic acid and water developed from the burners, and may, even without leaking, be worn so thin in some places, that the slightest pressure would cause it to open. On one occasion, from deficient draught, there was an accumulation of gas about this pipe, or some of the tubes connected with it, which caused a slight explosion, and, in order to secure a draught, a set of burners have been provided in the ascending portion of the pipe. It is quite possible that gas might again accumulate in the pipe, and that an explosion might burst it open. The inflamed gas might thus be spread under the seats of the galleries, at the imminent risk of setting them on fire. An earthenware pipe, set within a brick drain, would better effect the purpose, so far as avoiding the disagreeable effects of heat in the galleries. But should the accident of an explosion occur this would be anything but safe as against fire. Considering the smallness of the burners in question, and that the products of their combustion are developed above the heads of the Members, I would strongly advise that their ventilating pipes should be entirely dispensed with, that the gas should be burned open, and each burner should have a talc or other suitable deflector, deflector, to prevent the smoke from blackening the cove of the gallery. The products of combustion would at once ascend and mingle with the vitiated atmosphere in the upper part of the House, and would be rapidly withdrawn by the main ventilating channels.

Edward M. Barry.

The First Commissioner of Works to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

Office of Works, &c.,

8 August 1865.

My Lords,

I HAVE discovered that above the ceiling of the House of Commons there are wooden fittings in too close proximity to the gas lamps, and as wood becomes very inflammable after long exposure to a high temperature, I consider the substitution of metal for wood a necessary precaution against fire.

My attention was not directed to this circumstance until after the estimates of the current year had been voted, and consequently the expenditure requisite for this alteration was not inserted in them. The required works will interfere with the use of the apparatus for warming and ventilating the House of Commons during the period of their execution, and that period may possibly last for five months. As these works are of great urgency and importance, I request your Lordships' authority to execute them forthwith, and to defray the cost, viz., 1,540 l., out of the Vote for the Houses of Parliament, or in the event of that vote not proving sufficient for the purpose, out of an advance from Civil Contingencies, to be repaid out of the Vote for the Houses of Parliament next year.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter of the 10th inst., referring to the work proposed to be done in the roof of the House of Commons, and requesting me to procure an estimate for the same on which the Board can rely, I have the honour to enclose a tender from Mr. John Imray, engineer, for carrying out the work according to the specification forwarded to you in my letter of the 29th May last, for the sum of 1,400 l. Mr. Imray is a very competent engineer, and, from his former connection with the late Dr. Reid, is conversant with the general character of ventilation arrangements, and with those of the New Palace at Westminster in particular.

I should therefore recommend the acceptance of Mr. Imray's tender, which is 140 l. less than my estimate, as stated in my letter of the 29th May.

HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

RETURN to an Order of the Honourable The House of Commons,
dated 2 March 1866;—for,

COPY “ of REPORT on the VENTILATION, WARMING, and LIGHTING of the HOUSES of PARLIAMENT, by Dr. Percy, F.R.S.”

Office of Works, &c. }
7 March 1866. }

W. COWPER,
First Commissioner of Her Majesty's
Works, &c.

Sir,

Houses of Parliament, 20 February 1866.

IN accordance with the request in your letter of 5th October last, I have pleasure in now submitting to you a Report on the warming, ventilating and lighting of the Houses of Parliament. I have not described the details of the arrangements for warming and ventilating, as I presume such a description would have been superfluous. I have considered only certain points on which information appears to be needed, and have specified the alterations which have been made during the last recess. Much, in my judgment, yet remains to be done in various parts of the building, which I am happy to inform you will not require any considerable outlay. All the appliances for effective ventilation exist, but a great number of minor details are defective, and need completion. In drawing up this Report I have sought to be as concise as possible.

To the Right honourable the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works, &c. &c.

I am, &c.
(signed) John Percy.

R E P O R T.

Human Sensations are not always Infallible with respect to Judgment of Atmospheric Temperature.

THE same external temperature does not equally affect the same individual at all times. The state of the stomach as to the quantity of food which it contains, the amount of alcoholic liquor circulating through the system, the muscular exertion which the body may have just previously undergone, and the stimulus of mental excitement, all tend to modify our susceptibility with respect to atmospheric temperature. Different individuals, even under similar bodily conditions, experience, as is well known, different sensations from the same atmospheric temperature, according to their temperament, their age, their habits, particularly as to the use of cold ablutions, their clothing, and the climate of the country which they may have inhabited. Very slight derangement of health, as in the case of an incipient cold, may also powerfully influence our susceptibility with respect to external temperature. Hence it is not reasonable to expect that in any considerable assembly of men there should be uniformity in bodily conditions, and, consequently, agreement as to what is the most comfortable temperature. If specific proof were needed in support of this conclusion, it might be supplied from the record of complaints concerning temperature from Members of the last House of Commons. While in some instances such complaints may have been well founded, it is certain that in other instances they resulted from the special bodily conditions of individuals. It has occurred that complaints have proceeded simultaneously from two Members sitting either side by side or close to each other, one complaining that the temperature was uncomfortably low, and the other that it was uncomfortably high. It should ever be borne in mind that our individual sensations may be treacherous in the indication of temperature, as we are not accurate, invariable, and unimaginative instruments like thermometers; and that a temperature which may be agreeable to ourselves may not be equally so to our neighbours.

The power of regulating temperature in both Houses of Parliament is so perfect that, except during the hot season, it might be maintained at any given degree near 60° Fahrenheit.

Human Sensations are not always Infallible with respect to Judgment of Ventilation.

Some men find comfort in an atmosphere which to others would be insupportable from its closeness and oppression; and the same man will not, under varying bodily conditions, such as those above mentioned, find the same degree of ventilation, ceteris paribus, equally agreeable. Drowsiness, for example, has not unfrequently been ascribed to want of air, when it has certainly been due to the special condition of the body, or other obvious causes. Imagination has a powerful influence in modifying our impressions. Thus the association of open windows with ventilation, particularly during summer, has from our childhood been so constant and in ordinary dwelling-houses so well founded in fact, that we can hardly believe there can be efficient ventilation during summer in any apartment with closed windows, even though it may be proved that much more air passes through when the windows are shut than when they are open. This has been clearly and repeatedly established by experiment in the House of Commons; when the windows are opened, the quantity of air which ascends through the House is much diminished, and the temperature generally rises several degrees in a few minutes afterwards. The imagination, however, is an element not to be ignored, especially in the physiology of human beings. General Morin, in his excellent treatise on Ventilation, makes the following observation concerning the House of Lords: "Quelques pairs que j'ai consultés se plaignent que l'air intérieur des salles est lourd et porte au sommeil. Ils assurent qu'ils sont parfois obligés de réclamer l'ouverture des fenêtres; mais il faut observer que les séances ont lieu le soir, après le dîner, et se prolongent souvent assez tard."* This would be more correct with respect to the sittings of the House of Commons.

Volume of Air desirable.

It is not possible to overestimate the beneficial influence of efficient ventilation upon the health of man. Yet it is only in recent times that the extent of this influence has been clearly established and generally appreciated. The volume of fresh air, which only a few years ago was considered sufficient for perfect health, would now be regarded as wholly inadequate. The published records of medical observations abound in cases illustrative of the bad effect of deficient ventilation upon the human constitution both in health and in sickness; and they also present ample proof of the fact that of all sanitary conditions not one is more conducive to health than a copious supply of fresh air. In the act of respiration carbonic acid is exhaled, and this, as every one knows, is a gas which, in an undiluted state, speedily destroys life. The atmosphere contains carbonic acid, but in proportion so small as not to be injurious to health. Now it may be shown that, in order that this proportion should not be exceeded where men are congregated, it is essential that each individual should receive at least about 1,600 feet of fresh air per hour, or 20 cubic feet per minute. However, the best authorities on ventilation agree in opinion that it is desirable to supply about 2,000 feet to each man per hour, or 33 per minute. Dr. Reid regarded 10 cubic feet per minute as generally sufficient, but occasionally supplied 60 cubic feet per minute.

But

* Études sur la Ventilation, I. p. 18.

But organic matter of unknown composition and watery vapour are evolved along with carbonic acid in expiration, as also from the general surface of the body; and there is certain evidence of the fact that this organic matter may, even when only slightly concentrated, be deleterious to health. It is this matter that causes the unpleasant odour of crowded rooms; and although it may instantly be detected by the sense of smell, and may be rendered manifest by chemical tests, yet it has proved too subtle for investigation by the most refined methods of chemical analysis. So long as any sensible odour is produced in a room by emanations from human beings, the ventilation of that room is imperfect.

The calculation of the supply of fresh air needed in order to prevent the carbonic acid from surpassing its natural limit is easily made, and may be useful as affording one indication of practical value; but of itself it is inconclusive, inasmuch as it proves nothing with respect to the volume of air required adequately to remove the emanations of organic matter above mentioned. It is affirmed by some persons that this matter is not susceptible of such speedy diffusion in the surrounding atmosphere as carbonic acid; and by other persons that it is specifically heavier than atmospheric air, and descends accordingly. Hence, it has been inferred that ventilation downwards is preferable to ventilation upwards. But the fact is, we know nothing either of the chemical or physical nature of this matter; and it is therefore vain, and may be mischievous, to attempt to found systems of ventilation on what at present are mere assumptions.

There is one proposition which may be accepted without reasonable doubt, namely, that too much fresh air cannot be supplied, provided its temperature and its state as to moisture be suitable, and no draught be perceived, a condition which should be regarded as a fundamental principle in every so-called system of ventilation. Dr. Parkes, in his valuable work on Practical Hygiène, correctly observes, "wherever practical, we should be contented with nothing short of an almost unlimited supply."

The air is vitiated not only by the emanations from the human body, but also by the combustion of matters, such as gas, oil or other fatty substances employed in illumination, the ultimate products of all of which are water and carbonic acid, with the addition, in the case of gas, of a sensible amount of sulphurous acid. It is astonishing how great deterioration of the air from this cause is tolerated without complaint in many private dwellings. In the House of Commons not a particle of the products of the combustion of the gas, which is the sole agent of illumination, is allowed to escape into the atmosphere of the House; and in the House of Lords, which, under ordinary circumstances is also wholly lighted by gas, these products escape only in the upper part of the House, and are immediately carried off through the ceiling, though, with the existing arrangement, not so as entirely to prevent contact with the painted and gilded work.

During the last Session of Parliament and the recess, numerous determinations have been made of the quantity of air which under varying conditions passed through the House of Lords and the House of Commons; and the results have demonstrated that the supply has generally exceeded the proportion declared by the best authorities to be amply sufficient.*

Velocity of the Air in Ventilation.

Perfect ventilation involves adequate renewal of the air without perceptible currents. At the usual temperature, and under ordinary circumstances, the motion of the air generally becomes sensible at about $1\frac{1}{4}$ foot per second; but some individuals may be sensitive to currents of less velocity. With air at a higher temperature, ceteris paribus, a higher velocity will not merely be tolerated, but may even prove agreeable; but what the exact relation should be between the temperature and the velocity of the air cannot at present be exactly stated. At extremely low temperatures, such as occur in the Arctic regions regions, very slight movement of the air has been found very painful, if not actually insupportable. On the other hand, at very high temperatures, as in Tropical regions, comparatively rapid movement of the air is beneficial as well as agreeable. But rapid currents of comparatively hot air may even produce the sensation of cold.

* Note.—The details of the experiments which have been made on this subject, if necessary, may be submitted on a future occasion. Since this Report was presented, it was found that on the night of the 12th instant, when leave was asked to bring in the Electoral Franchise Bill, about 1,500,000 cubic feet, or between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 gallons of air passed through the House of Commons every hour.

With reference to the question of the velocity of the air, its condition as to moisture is also a matter of importance. When in hot weather it is highly charged with moisture, it causes, as every one knows, the sensations of oppression and languor. This is well exemplified in the hot damp atmosphere of a green house devoted to orchideous plants. When, on the other hand, the air is very dry, as during the prevalence of east winds, it produces the disagreeable impression so well known in this country, and is apt to excite bronchial irritation attended with coughing.

System of Ventilation at the Houses of Parliament.

The plan of mechanical propulsion by fans has long since been abandoned, and the air is now exclusively put in motion by means of heat, precisely on the same principle as in most of our collieries. When air is heated it expands, and, as it does not thereby increase in weight, it becomes specifically lighter, ascending through cold air for the same reason that a balloon filled with coal gas rises in the atmosphere, or oil in water. Heat is applied by coke-fires of the simplest construction. There are two great upcast shafts, namely, one of the turrets of the Victoria Tower and the Clock Tower. There are also the following additional upcast-shafts, namely, the Peers' shaft, the Commons' shaft, the Speaker's shaft, the river front shaft, the north end shaft, the west front shaft, and the Black Rod shaft. In the first two shafts, there are coke fires for the sole purpose of causing an upward current of air; but within the other shafts are contained the terminal and vertical portions of the smoke flues, and the movement of the air upwards was dependent on the heat which they communicated. Although coke fires are kept up within these terminal portions of the smoke flues, in order to increase the ascensional power of the smoke, yet the temperatures of the sides of these flues, which are of galvanized iron, is often too low to produce the requisite effect upon the surrounding external air. In one of these shafts, namely, the west front shaft, it was ascertained that a current of cold air descended from the top along the sides, while a current of warm air ascended along the surface of the smoke flue. A special coke furnace has been erected at the bottom of this great shaft which will cause a vigorous current of air upwards, and tend also to increase the draught of the smoke flue. By this means great additional power has been obtained of extracting the vitiated air from the Peers' Robing Room and the west front. A similar furnace with the same object has been erected near the Black Rod shaft.

The two systems of ventilation by mechanical propulsion and exhaustion have been actively discussed, and each has its supporters. Both Houses of Parliament have condemned the former system and sanctioned the latter; and it is satisfactory to know that one of the highest scientific and practical living authorities on the subject of ventilation, General Morin, has also decided in favour of this system. When properly carried out and carefully attended to, it is all that can be desired both in regard to simplicity and efficiency. It requires no machinery, and is not liable to any sensible derangement, except during sudden gusts in tempestuous weather, and the only labour which it needs is that of a common stoker. There are other reasons of a purely scientific nature, which in this report it is not necessary to adduce. It is capable of ventilating the largest collieries with all their intricate workings and roads, often extending many miles in the aggregate. The upcast-shafts now in operation at the Houses of Parliament would far more than suffice to ventilate buildings covering a much larger area if suitable communications existed between them and all the rooms and passages, which, unfortunately, is not the case.

Some years ago ventilation by the steam jet excited much attention, especially with reference to its application in collieries. The mode of action of the jet is well illustrated in the ordinary railway locomotive engine, in which the waste steam rushes up the funnel and drags after it the gaseous products of combustion, bustion, thus causing an active current through the fire-box. The steam jet has been made the subject of careful investigation by eminent colliery engineers in the north of England, and pronounced by them inferior to furnace ventilation. Sir Goldsworthy Gurney was at one period the chief advocate of the steam jet, and introduced it into the Houses of Parliament, where it was for some time employed; but long before he resigned his appointment he had completely discarded it.

Source of the Air Supply.

In the House of Lords the air entered through openings in the bottom of the two series of folding doors in the Peers' and State Office courts respectively; or in warm weather the doors were opened to a greater or less extent as might be judged desirable. It then passed through gauze, by which it was deprived of much mechanically suspended impurity, next over the warming apparatus termed "Gurney's batteries," and at last ascended through the perforated floor of the House. All precautions were taken to render the current as equable as possible in every part of the air-chamber before it reached the floor; and in squally weather much attention was required to prevent irregularity in this respect. During the last Session there was no means of increasing the quantity of air admitted except by opening the folding doors from top to bottom. With such an arrangement it was not always easy to prevent perceptible currents: and it was therefore proposed that all the doors should be provided with louvre openings, capable of easy and accurate adjustment within. This proposal has been recently carried into effect. Moreover, when the doors are set ajar or open, as will be the case later in the season, the intrusion of strangers cannot well be prevented, especially as the dining rooms in the Peers' court are much frequented by the general public during the Session of Parliament. A light ornamental palisading along each of the arcades at the bottom of the House of Lords would prevent this inconvenience, and would further be useful in permitting of the use of the water jets outside the doors instead of within, as at present. When these jets are in operation the whole of the floor of the lower air-chamber of the House, owing to the want of proper inclination outwards, becomes wetted, and this is a condition which, in a medical point of view, is not desirable. Mr. Edward Barry has expressed his opinion that palisading of suitable pattern might be erected without the least infringement of architectural propriety.

In the House of Commons the air is admitted into the lower air-chamber through doors in the Star court and Commons' court respectively. These inlets are of very limited area compared with those in the House of Lords; and in so far it is more difficult to secure uniformity in the velocity of the air circulating upwards, and to prevent draughts. This difficulty is in great measure occasioned by the appropriation of a large portion of the lower air-chamber of the House of Commons, partly as a private kitchen and partly as the Vote Office. The air, as in the House of Lords, is strained through gauze, and, after having been warmed, when necessary, by "Gurney's batteries," ascends through the floor of the House. Although various precautions have been taken to render its velocity as uniform as possible, yet occasionally, in squally weather, draughts have been complained of.

With regard to the introduction of the air as well into the House of Lords as into the House of Commons, there is one circumstance which deserves special attention; and that is, the necessity of keeping the courts on the sides of each house as clean as possible. If horse-dung happen to fall near any of the inlets, the air entering will instantly be thereby more or less infected. This is particularly liable to occur in the Commons' court, where carriages sometimes wait for a considerable time near the entrance to the Ladies' Gallery, which is close to the inlet for the air on that side of the House. In order to keep the air of the House from being thus contaminated with the not very agreeable emanations from horse-dung, carriages should be forbidden to wait at the door above mentioned, and should be stationed in the Speaker's court, whence they may be called as soon as required. Indeed, during the last Session the police were requested, as far as possible, to enforce such a regulation.

Annoyance has occasionally been experienced in the House from the odour of tobacco-smoke. If a person while smoking merely walks through the Commons' court, in a few seconds a distinct odour of tobacco-smoke will be perceived, especially near the Speaker's chair. There are other sources from which that odour may be derived and pass into the House; as, for instance, the Members' entrance, and thence up the staircase into the Lobby.

A strong smell of the kitchen was several times perceived in the House of Commons during the last Session of Parliament, and this was due to the opening of the tops of the windows in the kitchen of the House. On account of this smell it was necessary, more than once, entirely to prevent the entrance of the air from the Commons' court. A very large quantity of air can now be drawn out of the kitchen, partly underground to the Clock Tower and partly above, into the Commons' upcast-shaft, so that even with open windows there is reason to believe that the nuisance in question will be greatly lessened, if not wholly abated.

The smell of gas-tar was several times perceived during last Session in the House of Commons, and elsewhere at the Houses of Parliament; and, on investigation, it was found that the tar from the Chartered Gas Company was transferred from carts through open gutters into barges moored just under the south wall. A representation of the subject was made to the directors of the company, and they promised immediately to abate the nuisance.

Want of Plans.

It is remarkable that there are no trustworthy plans of the arrangements for warming and ventilating the Houses of Parliament. There are many hundreds of air-courses under as well as aboveground, beneath floors, in walls, over ceilings, and in roofs; some for supplying cold air, others for supplying warm air, and others again for carrying off vitiated air; there are air-valves in every part of the building; there are enormous smoke-flues running horizontally within and immediately under the roofs, with hundreds of chimneys in communication; there are, it is asserted, steam-pipes of which the aggregate length is about 15 miles, and about 1,200 stopcocks and valves connected with these pipes; and there is a multitude of holes and crannies as intricate and tortuous as the windings of a rabbit warren. It is not possible that any man should accurately remember these details, even if he had seen every stone and brick laid; and in the absence of plans occasional blundering will be inevitable. It is satisfactory to state that no sooner was the First Commissioner made acquainted with this urgent want than steps were taken to supply it, and an architectural draughtsman has been engaged for the purpose of preparing the necessary drawings. For several months this gentleman and two of the most experienced men of the staff have been occupied in the work of exploration; which has proved to be laborious as well as difficult; and in many cases it has not been possible to trace accurately the course of the air-passages. All the air-courses in the Speaker's house, in the west front, and in the river front, above the basement, have thus been explored, described, and catalogued; and plans of them are in progress.* A considerable time must elapse before this investigation will be thoroughly completed. Much has been discovered not previously known to any person in this department, and not a few erroneous notions have been corrected. Duplicate descriptions will be deposited at the Office of Works in order that they may be securely preserved for future guidance. It is almost needless to remark that without accurate plans this department is entirely at the mercy of the persons now engaged, and that even supposing any one or several of these persons possessed a complete knowledge of all the arrangements for ventilation, which is not the fact, it would not be safe to trust to their memory alone.

Roof of the House of Commons.

In the chamber above the ceiling of the House of Commons about 1,000 feet of gas are consumed every hour during the evening sittings; and the products of combustion, after having passed through a series of vertical sheet-iron pipes into two large horizontal sheet-iron pipes, escaped from the latter at a comparatively high temperature, and came immediately into contact with light, easily easily inflammable flaps and doors of deal. Besides, there was a large quantity of similar woodwork through the whole extent of the above-mentioned chamber which had long been useless; and in the centre, from one end to the other, immediately over the lights, was a wooden gangway. Now, when wood is long exposed to the action of hot air, as was the case in the roof of the House of Commons, it becomes more and more susceptible of ignition. The late Mr. Braidwood, superintendent of the London Fire-engine Establishment, in evidence before a Committee of the House of Lords, expressed his belief, from observation of many instances, that by long exposure to heat not much exceeding that of boiling water, timber is brought into such a condition that something like spontaneous combustion takes place; that the time might be eight or ten years; that is to say, it may have taken so long for the heat from pipes charged with or used to convey steam, hot water, or heated air, laid among the joists of a floor, or in the heart of a partition, or elsewhere in a building, encased in timber, to induce the condition necessary to the actual ignition of the timber."* On this point, also, the following extract from General Morin's Treatise on Ventilation may be aptly quoted. "Il n'est pas inutile de faire remarquer que la circulation de l'air chaud, à des températures assez peu élevées, de 100° (i.e. 212° Fahrenheit, or the boiling-point of water), par exemple, paraît exercer, par sa continuité, sur les bois, une influence désorganisatrice assez sensible. La prudence doit donc engager à n'employer que du fer ou de la maçonnerie comme matériaux de construction dans le voisinage des tuyaux que l'air devrait parcourir à des températures aussi élevées, ce qui, du reste, arrivera rarement."† Nothing could be more applicable than this passage to the condition lately existing in the roof of the House of Commons, and the General might have intended it for our warning. The late Captain Fowke, Royal Engineers, inspected the roof one night of the last Session of Parliament, and strongly expressed his belief as to its dangerous condition with regard to fire. He remarked, that throughout the entire building he had never seen a greater mixture of caution and carelessness in that respect, and that, if he were in the position of the author of this report, he should not allow the night to pass without pointing out the danger to the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings. But the First Commissioner's attention had been previously directed to the subject, when he forthwith personally inspected the roof, and then immediately consulted Mr. Edward Barry, A.R.A., who concurred in the opinion as to its liability to catch fire, and advised what should be done to render it safe. That advice has been acted upon. A very large quantity of superfluous and easily inflammable deal timber has been removed, and, where necessary, sheet iron has been substituted. The system of ventilation remains identically the same as previously, but the details of the arrangements are greatly simplified, and in so far improved. There is now perfect control over the air in every part of the House, and its circulation may be accurately and instantly regulated according to requirements; whereas, previously, there was a complicated system of flaps and doors which needed much longer time for adjustment. The wooden gangway along the centre is replaced by one of wrought iron grating. The whole ceiling of the House is now perfectly accessible; and if any part should catch fire, which is very unlikely, the fire would, in all probability, be immediately extinguished. It may now be affirmed that, whereas the roof of the House of Commons has been in imminent danger of fire during some years, it has been rendered comparatively incombustible, and, pro tanto, safe.

* Note.—In the course of this exploration it was found that some of the fresh air which supplied the Speaker's house, passed over two urinals.

The alteration in the roof of the House of Commons, with a view to the prevention of fire, has furnished a fitting opportunity of making the following improvements connected with the ventilation of the House. The Ladies' Gallery now forms part of the general system of ventilation of the House, and is not, as heretofore, supplied with fresh air from behind the House, a method which made it difficult to prevent currents of cold air from descending on the heads of the reporters underneath. Indeed, in the early part of last Session, such complaints were addressed from the Reporters' Gallery to the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings.

More power has been obtained over the circulation of air through the division lobbies;

* A Guide to the proper Regulation of Buildings in Towns, &c., by William Hosking, Architect and Civil Engineer, 1848, p. 104.

lobbies; and all the arrangements for regulating the quantity of air are more accurate and more available than previously.

On exploration, it was found that there was no appliance for ventilating either the ladies' water-closets or the reporters' water-closets and urinals, and that there was an air communication above between all three. This evil has been remedied.

There was a special and somewhat complicated arrangement at the back of the House for ventilating the water-closets of the House of Commons by means of gas jets, which was not only dangerous on account of closely surrounding deal woodwork, but quite superfluous. The power over the air by means of the upcast ventilating shaft of the House of Commons is far more than sufficient to ventilate the House, and all the departments in connection therewith.

The power of moving the air from the refreshment room and kitchen of the House of Commons has been much increased. Formerly, at the top of the vertical shaft which conveyed the vitiated air from those departments was a coke fire, the most disadvantageous position possible; for the air, after having been thus heated and rendered specifically lighter, was compelled, at a considerable sacrifice of power, to descend in its course to the upcast shaft. Now the vitiated air passes directly to that shaft without loss of power, and the coke fire above mentioned is no longer used.

During the last Ses- sion there was much complaint, both of heat and of want of air in this room, and with good reason, as there was scarcely any circulation of air through it. It can now be thoroughly ventilated.

At the close of the last Session of Parliament, a Select Committee on the Office of the Clerk of the Parliaments and Office of Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod reported as follows: "That great complaints having been made to your Committee of the want of ventilation in the several committee rooms, your Committee have inspected the committee rooms, numbers 1 to 6, of the House of Commons, and recommend that the system of ventilation there should, as far as possible, be applied to the committee rooms of this House."

The complaints with respect to these committee rooms were well founded. A very careful examination of all the arrangements for the ventilation of each room has been made, and sufficient reason for those complaints has been discovered. In a table subjoined will be found all the details of the rooms at the times of the complaints and the alterations which have since been made.

A brief description of D room in its former and present states will suffice to explain the nature of these alterations. The capacity of the room is 19,900 cubic feet. In the skirting was perforated zinc for the supply of fresh air, and the total area of the holes amounted to 7·57 square feet; but on examination it was found the total area for the inlet of fresh air to the perforated part of the skirting was only 1·0 square foot; and this, it need hardly be remarked, was quite inadequate. The total area of inlet is now not less than eight square feet, so that a very large quantity of fresh air may be supplied at a velocity insufficient to cause sensible draughts. The former area of outlet of D room was 5·25 square feet, and the present area is 7·75 square feet. The inlet and outlet openings are provided with valves whereby their areas may be accurately varied according to circumstances. The vitiated air escapes through fretwork in the ceiling; and formerly there was only feeble power of extraction, whereas now the shaft which receives the vitiated air from this as well as from the other rooms of the same series is in communication with the powerfully exhausting upcast-shaft of the Victoria Tower. There is at present ample power of extracting the vitiated air from all these rooms, and at the same time the necessary arrangements for controlling supply as well as extraction.

The steam coils in the windows have been replaced by "Gurney's batteries," which have answered very well in a similar position in the House of Commons Library, and there is little doubt that the change will be found decidedly advantageous. It must be remembered that in cold weather, especially with wind from the east, there will be great refrigeration of the glass of the windows, which covers an area of about 100 square feet, and that, consequently, currents of cold air may be expected to fall from the windows. Formerly there was no ascending current, properly so termed, of warm air from the window boards underneath, which were not, as now, perforated; whereas in future a copious current of warm air will rise from the bottom of the windows, and tend to neutralize the effect of the descending current of cold air. It should be stated that in the other committee rooms of this series no change has been made in the mode of warming by coils.

All the windows of the first series of the Peers' committee rooms have been made to open wide at the top, and the suggestions of the Select Committee have been carried into effect; indeed, it may now be affirmed without hesitation, that in respect of ventilation, the Lords' committee rooms in the river front are superior to any committee room of the Commons.

In exploring the other series of the Lords' committee rooms of the west front, lettered E, F, G, H, it has been found that, although the usual construction exists for warming and ventilating, yet there is no communication between the rooms and their respective air-chambers. The necessary communications can be speedily made as soon as instructions are given to that effect. The windows of these rooms face the western sun, and must necessarily raise the temperature within, especially during spring and summer.

It should also be stated that no room in the west front is specially ventilated. There are, indeed, all the usual arrangements for efficient ventilation, namely, the air-chambers under the floors and perforation in the ceilings in connection with upcast-shafts; but at present there is no connection between the air-chamber and the rooms, and consequently no provision for a supply of fresh air from the exterior. This want of connection will obviously tend to counteract the draught up the chimneys from the fire-places, and to make them "smoke." The evil can be easily remedied by cutting suitable openings in the skirting.

REPORT ON THE VENTILATION, WARMING, AND

Commons' Committee Rooms.

All the details for the ventilation of these rooms will be found in the accompanying Table.

TABLE showing the Former and Present Conditions of the COMMONS' COMMITTEE ROOMS.

Note.—The figures printed in italics show the alterations which have been made in the Committee Room.

[illegible]

It will be perceived that in the rooms numbered from 20 to 26 inclusive, there is no special provision for a supply of fresh air from below. The intention was to introduce a current of fresh air, suitably warmed when necessary, through one part of the ceiling, and to extract the vitiated air from another part of the ceiling; but the result was a failure, just as in the case of a similar attempt at ventilation in the House of Lords, and just as might have been anticipated. The rooms above mentioned are undoubtedly the worst in a sanitary point of view of the whole series of committee rooms. One day during the last Session of Parliament there were 164 persons crowded into the space between the barrier and the wall, in number 23 room, and the standing room for each amounted only to 1·57 superficial foot, while the number of cubic feet to each person was only 48.

The windows in the rooms of this series are so low, that, even if they were made to open fully, the ventilation in the case of crowding would still be inadequate, and indeed with such crowding as stated above, it would be about as hopeless a task to endeavour to ventilate the room properly, as it would be to endeavour to ventilate a cask of red herrings.

Many of the Commons' committee rooms are susceptible of improvements in ventilation, which might be effected at only a trifling outlay. All the arrangements for applying fresh and removing foul air exist; but there are numerous defects in minor details which, however, can speedily be remedied.

Steam Boilers.

During the last Session of Parliament it was reported that the boilers had not been properly examined for a considerable time, and that there was reason for apprehension as to their condition; and some uneasiness was in consequence excited in the public mind, particularly as it was further declared that boilers were immediately under each House of Parliament, and that in the event of explosion most serious results might be anticipated. A question on the subject was put in the House of Commons to the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and answered to the effect that there was no reasonable cause for alarm. The fact is, the boilers had been recently inspected in a very careful manner by the well-known engineers Messrs. Easton and Amos, and pronounced perfectly safe; and there is not a single boiler situated under either House of Parliament.

As great interests are at stake, it has been considered desirable to place all the boilers under the inspection of the Manchester Association for the Prevention of Steam Boiler Explosions. That Association has been established during several years, and there is good reason for believing that its operations have been attended with great success. It employs skilful practical engineers, who devote their whole time to the work of inspection, and so acquire very great experience in this special kind of observation. Three inspections of each boiler are made annually, and each boiler is insured against explosion to the amount of 300 l. The chief engineer of the Association, Mr. Lavington Fletcher, recommended several additions to each boiler with the object of insuring greater security, namely, two rings of angle-iron on each tube; safety valves of the most improved construction, which are not liable to wedge, and which blow off into the open air; and new water gauges. All these improvements have been adopted. As many of the most important manufacturing firms of Manchester and elsewhere, have placed their boilers under the inspection of this Association, it was conceived, that by following their example in this respect at the Houses of Parliament, the public would have the assurance that the best possible means had been taken to lessen the chance of explosion. During last year three inspections of the boilers have been made by the engineers of the Association, according to the agreement with the Office of Works.

Gas.

The whole of the gas consumed in the Houses of Parliament is supplied by the Chartered Gas Company, through a special main, and, with a small exception, exception, is of the quality known as 20-candle gas, agreeably to contract. The price is six shillings per 1,000 cubic feet. It has been constantly tested during the sitting of Parliament as well as during the recess, and in only two or three trials has it been found below the 20-candle standard. On each of these occasions the inspector of the company was informed of the inferiority of quality, and immediately afterwards this cause of complaint was removed.

The small quantity of gas supplied below the above-mentioned standard is 12-candle gas, at four shillings and sixpence per 1,000 cubic feet, and is consumed in the Courts of Law. The total consumption of gas at the Houses of Parliament is very large. There are no fewer than 38 meters connected with various parts of the buildings, and the register of the weekly consumption is now forwarded every week to the Office of Works. There is a very large consumption in the cooking stoves and in the lighting of many of the corridors and passages, which require illumination by gas even in daytime. A Table is subjoined, showing the amount of gas which has passed through each meter from 8th January 1865 to January 9th, 1866, and the cost of the same.

Accident.

On Thursday, the 18th October 1865, at 10 p.m., an accident from the escape of gas occurred in the residence of the Librarian of the House of Lords, which might have been attended with most serious results. A main of cast iron, 3 inches in internal diameter, was suddenly fractured where it passed through the wall in the basement, and a torrent of gas consequently escaped into the House from the cellars, and extended as far as the Library and Committee-room corridor of the House of Lords. On examination it was ascertained that there was no play for the pipe in its passage through the wall, so that in case of subsidence of the building it would necessarily be fractured, as it consisted of cast, and not of wrought, iron. It appears that this is the third accident of the same kind at the Houses of Parliament. The danger of such accidents was immediately pointed out to the First Commissioner of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, who gave instructions that no time should be lost in providing against the possibility of their recurrence. These instructions have been carried into effect, and now every main has sufficient play where it passes through a wall. Owing to the want of accurate plans, showing the distribution of the gas mains in the various court-yards, it has been necessary to make a thorough exploration, which has needed much time and labour. Many useless pipes charged with gas have been discovered, and either removed or cut off, and accurate plans of the distribution of the mains have been prepared.
